W 10:00am-12:50pm

This course will engage in a close consideration and reading of classical and modern works on Islamic law and ethics. The course will provide a rare opportunity to students of comparative law and religious ethics to learn about one of the well-developed religious-ethical systems in Abrahamic traditions. In this class, we will examine how Muslim ethicists respond to a range of contemporary challenges such as abortion, militarism and minimum wage.
